

Danger Level 1 - Low

Relatively stable situation

Avalanche danger level 1 has been declared for all our mountain ranges.

There will be a significant cooling during the day, which will stabilize the softened and melted snow cover well.

Only in the high altitudes of the High Tatras, in shady, mainly east-facing exposures, there may still be pillows and slabs of wind-beaten snow that could loosen with a large additional load.

Snowpack

After the previous three days of very warm inversion weather, the cold front will cool down and the air temperature in the mountains will drop below 0°C again.

The snow cover will thus become firmer and well stabilised.

Snowfall is forecast for the afternoon.

Tendency

Slightly rising with snowfall.